

The Real Food Challenge
Siddharth Das and Stephanie Levitt

The Real Food Challenge is a movement to push large institutions to support locally, ethically, humanely, and sustainably sourced food to restructure food industry practices as a whole. At Indiana University, we're hoping to create a network of local food producers and strengthen their place in the food system.

At a university level, we are working with current vendors to shift their practices to meet the Real Food guidelines; as students, we're pushing the university to commit to purchasing at least 25% of their food to meet these guidelines by 2025. We're hoping to connect with other students about the Real Food Challenge through posters and videos.
